Bringing You Home

We counted down the weeks until the day we could finally bring you home. Out of the whole playful litter, you were the one whose spirit called to ours. That first journey home in our arms was the beginning of everything.

You inspected every doorway, claimed your favorite cushion, and with a quiet sigh of relief, let us know that your search was over. You were home.

LIFE LESSONS

What You Taught Us

You taught us that a walk is never just about exercise—it is about greeting the world with fresh curiosity. You taught us that naps are non-negotiable, snacks are worth celebrating, and forgiveness is instantaneous.

Above all, you showed us that love requires no grand declarations. It is expressed in the quiet weight of your head resting upon our knee at the close of an exhausting day.
